

SS Persia Jewellery Collection

A unique collection of limited edition designer jewellery created using gems brought up from the wreck of the P&O SS Persia in 2003

This exclusive and unique jewellery collection uses precious gemstones recovered from the wreck of the P&O SS Persia. The ship was torpedoed on December 30th 1915 off Crete by a German U-boat and sank in under 5 minutes with the loss of 343 lives.

A British firm, Deep Tek, found the wreck off Crete in 2003 at a depth of 10,000 feet and used robotic machinery to cut into its strong room and retrieve a part of its precious cargo. This was achieved using new techniques and machinery to work at such great depths. A large haul of artifacts including 432 rubies and other precious stones were brought up from the wreck and found to be in remarkable condition after 88 years at the bottom of the sea. The gemstones were recovered from the mailroom and comprises of real rubies, and some of the earliest known synthetic Verneuil rubies.

Deep Tek have kindly gifted the gems for charitable use to raise money for Smile train and Mission to Seafarers as well as contribute to a new lasting stone memorial to those who died.

This collection has been created by Alex Goodman of Goodman Morris Jewellers of Brighton. He has taken the wreck gemstones and using inspiration from the design of the ship and its name Persia created a beautiful collection of bracelets, pendants, ear rings, cufflinks and bespoke rings available in gold or silver. They are all hand made in Brighton in their own workshop and each piece is numbered and authenticated.

For descendants of those connected with this tragic story, there can be no better way to feel close to their loved ones with a real stone from the wreck set in a beautiful setting.
